1. Position

Associate Professor or Junior Associate Professor

2. Areas of Research

Metabolomics characterizes biological profiles of metabolites that can directly reflect the outcome of complex networks of biochemical reactions under the control of genetic and environmental cues, thus providing insights into multiple aspects of pathophysiology. Our aim is to discover novel biomolecules as potential targets for medical applications. To achieve this aim, we have been taking advantage of liquid chromatography tandem-mass spectrometry (LC/MS/MS) techniques and gene-targeted mouse models of human disease. We are seeking highly motivated candidates with a strong background in the related fields. Prior working experience in characterization of disease-related phenotype in genetically modified mice, LC/MS/MS analysis of biological samples and lipid biochemistry, is required.
